Issue Log

-App technical contact has indicated that bug fixes and patches will likely be forthcoming, but will not affect functionality or user interface.

-Branding/Copyright notes: "Based on the information submitted to our office, it is our understanding that Emory is the sole developer of the app. Because, the app was developed using NSF funds and as per to the terms of the NSF grant award, Emory can retain the ownership to the app. Hence, Emory is the sole owner of the app. That being said, OTT recommends not to enforce its copyrights by placing Emory's copyright notice on the app and also not to put Emory branding on the app. However, the app developers should place other copyright notices from the open source software from which the codes were used and they also should list the open sources with links to their respective licenses they came with (I believe, those are Apache 2.0 and MIT licenses). In summary, this app can be released through Google and Apple without placing the Emory's copyright notice and branding." (per Raj Guddneppanavar 2017.06.28)
